

Rocio Reynoso #19

Underwater Dreams

10-7-14

I thought that, "Underwater Dreams," was a great movie because it was interesting and funny. It also has a good message. It's about a robot. The message was that even though you are poor and have a little bit of technology, all students deserve the same opportunity. It is about Mexicans who go to Arizona and cross the border. The Mexicans go to Carl Hayden School, in the middle of the desert. I was surprised at how they could beat all the universities, including MIT with high technology, by just using common things. Although their robot didn't look so pretty, it got #1. I think that this movie was interesting because their robot stopped working so they had to try again, and again. I think that, "Underwater Dreams," is funny because when they won, all Lorenzo wanted was to go to Heaters. But then the movie became sad because they were going to get deported, so they started the "Dreamers," club. One of them had to go to the army.

Then they compared their robot to another school's robot. Finally they started a Building ROV Club for students that want to have the chance to build robots, and it became an inspiration for the students because all the children wanted to be engineers.